The Meteor--- Again. Mr. H. A. Newton, Professor of Mathe matics in Yale University, who is perhaps as well qualified as any other man in the United States to enlighten the public upon such subjects, has written to his brother-inlaw, Robert Stiles, Esq., of this city. a private letter, from which he has kindly permitted us to make the following extract. referring to the meteor recently seen in Virginia and North Carolina. It is highly interesting as well as instructive.

YALE COLLEGE, December 6, 1877. Dear Brother Robert: I am very much obliged to you for the account of the meteor of November 20th, and for the several extracts about it from the Dispatch. I wish I could myself have been with you to have seen so splendid a sight. The letter of Professor Campbell, of Washington and Lee University, gives a very good statement of the path of the meteor through the air. If we regard the meteor when first seen at Richmond as over the central part of Pittsylvania county-say fifteen miles north of Danville at a height of about seventy miles from the ground, and that it passed before disappearance to a point a little south of east of Danville twenty-five miles distant and ten miles high-the several accounts will be pretty well satisfied. I cannot reconcile the statement, strictly taken, that it fell perpendicularly at Richmond, with the other statements. I suspect that it moved the watch-dial to the seven-hour figure. If and territory apply to W. W. HAYNE, not, the Bristol and other reports are dedecade.

The body would probably have been visiso developed in the air heat enough to melt the outer crust of the stone on the front of the mass. As fast as melted the material was rubbed off by the air, and, after belping to form the flame, was left behind along the track to make the enduring cloud-streak. The stone itself being firm enough to resist the condensation, could remain quite cold, possibly, one or two hundred degrees below zero in its interior. Of course, in such a fire, parts kept cracking off, and finally the whole broke up into small fragments with the terrific explosion heard at Danville, Clarksville, Halifax, &c. Some of these pieces may have reached the ground in solid form, though that is not certain. If I was in the vicinity I should take time to search for such fragments through the country not more than five or ten miles from Harmony, in Halifax county. stones, if found, will show a very thin black crust over most of the surface, not more than 1-50 inch in thickness, of material that was once melted, and will perhaps show marks of the flow of melted matter over the surface. Without breaking the stone the interior structure can be seen, since the fresh fractures will be pretty sure to show it. They should not be broken, but carefully preserved for examination and comparison with other meteoric stones. They are to be regarded as, in all probability, pieces of some comet that has been broken up in ages past, and as reand material some glimpses of a long and curious history that we all would like to know more about. Of course we should like to know more about. Of course we should be glid to got for the graph of the be glad to get for our college collection and for study specimens of all these bodies. The cloud that remained was borne away by the currents of the upper air. No one of the accounts which I have seen gives the direction of the drift. This direction is, however, always worth noting, as this is the
